Foreword

On a bright, sunny day in the month of June, 1901, the first of the summer holidays, the author of this book was standing in the courtyard of the old building of the University of Toronto, looking at the old building, still standing, and thinking of the many years that had passed since it was first built. The building was then a new building, and the author was a young man, full of life and energy, and full of hope for the future. The building was then a new building, and the author was a young man, full of life and energy, and full of hope for the future. The building was then a new building, and the author was a young man, full of life and energy, and full of hope for the future.

Study Hall students work especially hard when our principal, Mr. Reynolds, is in there!

Eager seniors devour the words of Mrs. Finch as she explains different words of the Anglo-Saxon language.

"Good cooking means Health," says Mrs. Girton to these sophomore girls as they develop their cooking abilities.

Mrs. Jerles keeps a watchful eye on one of her typing classes as they learn the skill of typing.

As a freshman points out the West Coast, Mr. Rust watches to make sure they understand the World Globe.

Some Seniors learn the skills of singing as Mr. Welker plays for them.

Mr. Settle, hoping to spread his knowledge, explains the equipment to the sophomore boys, that is used in his math and plane geometry classes.

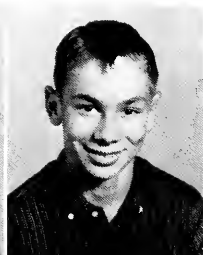

Mr. Null and part of his class watches as Joyce Hiatt points out different locations on one of the maps.
